Okay, so I'm late to the party. Not long ago, I needed to replace my smart phone, so I bought an iPhone 3G. I had a couple of goals for the iPhone. First, I wanted to understand what the fuss was all about. I also wanted to explore the app store, particularly after reading about some of the interesting and potentially cool games coming to the platform. A distant third was perhaps loading up some music to carry around, but I was a little reluctant, since battery life has always been a little concern with Apple's mobile phone. Well, I'm here to report that battery life is still an issue, but not because of anything I predicted. Take my second point: so far, I've downloaded exactly one app from the iPhone App Store, and it's not a game. (It's TrailGuru, for those of you who are curious.) So the App store and games haven't really captured much of my attention, at least to this point. My mobile phone use (as a phone) is somewhat desultory, particularly compared to most of my compatriots. I rarely come close to using my maximum time, and I only send out a handful of SMS messages a month. When I had a Windows mobile smart phone, I'd occasionally sync Outlook items (calendar and contacts), but rarely used it as an email device. Actually, I never used it as an email device. I started to realize that the iPhone was something different on a trip to Las Vegas to accompany my daughter's varsity volleyball team to a tournament. I got lost trying to find a hotel, so in desperation, I pulled out the iPhone. At that point, I had the iPhone for exactly one day, having unpacked and charged it the day before my trip. I brought up Google maps, and with only minor fiddling, managed to follow the blue dot to the hotel. Subsequently, I've used the iPhone as a GPS and mapping device a number of times. Then I began using the Web browser. Continued... In recent years, more and more individuals access websites through mobile devices and use mobile as their main method for receiving information from a variety of channels. Recognizing the need to provide information that is mobile-friendly, VA has been moving toward writing content on websites that keep mobile in mind and are exploring different ways to reach audiences through mobile devices. What exactly is mobile? Mobile means different things to different people. It's easiest to divide mobile into three distinct categories: Website adoption to recognize the importance of mobile - Content is written in such a way as to be read easily on a mobile device, implementing a bite-snack-meal approach for presenting information. The information is presented in small bites to form a snack, usually 3-4 lines of text to provide the most important information provided on the page at the top of it, so that the site visitor doesn't need to scroll down, enabling the user to access the most important information quickly. Responsive Web Design (RWD) - An approach to web design aimed at allowing desktop web pages to be viewed in response to the size of the screen or web browser one is viewing with (e.g., tablet or smart phone). VA has been using RWD on its desktop web pages since 2014. Developing exclusively mobile versions of websites - These "microsites" are completely designed for mobile. These sites contain code specific to mobile and are designed for mobile web tasks and browsing. These microsites often contain pared-down information on the same topics covered on the main site. One example is the Center for Disease Control and Prevention's mobile site, m.cdc.gov. Mobile tactics to reach people via their mobile devices Some of the most popular ways to reach individuals through their mobile devices include: Text (SMS), both one-way (receiving text messages) and two-way (text in word to code to receive custom content) Apps on smartphones Voice, one-way voice (eg. celebrity voice mail) or two-way voice (traditional phone call) Location-based services, including using maps and social applications, like foursquare, to check-in by location Photo/video, including barcodes, photo lookup, translation, digital watermarks VA Mobile Initiatives VA Mobile aims to improve the health of Veterans by providing technologies that expand clinical care beyond the traditional office visit. VA Mobile underscores VA's commitment to transform the way care is delivered and to improve health care coordination between Veterans and their care teams. VA recognizes that mobile health is emerging as an essential element of health care, and is dedicated to providing the most up-to-date technologies to enhance patient experiences. VA Mobile releases new Apps for Veterans regularly. Featured Apps Veteran Appointment Request Caring4Women Veterans Mobile Blue Button Resources There is a variety of resources on the web on mobile government initiatives and VA is involved in many groups that promote usability and mobile government practices. According to AdMob, Web traffic from Google Android devices is quickly overtaking Windows Mobile in the smartphone segment with 25% month-over-month growth in June. The advertising company, which does 40% of its business serving ads to iPhone users, says that the new numbers put Android at about 5% mobile Web market share worldwide—more than Windows Mobile. (One such device, the new HTC Hero, below.) AdMob also broke down some of Apple's global sales numbers for the first time, announcing that of the 45 million iPhones and iPod Touches sold worldwide, about 25 million of them are here in the U.S., based on data collected from their network. The ratio, AdMob says, has stayed steady at about 2:1, iPhone to iPod Touch. Check out the rest of the data here. many of us want to use Android phone as a modem for computer but due to some reason we cant. android offers this function.requirements :-1.
